Hamsters Build New Industry On Gulf Coast

NEW ORLEANS.—A new Gulf coast industry is being built around a small four-handed furry animal with a big name.

The weak-eyed little fellow commonly is known as the hamster, but to the scientific-minded the proper name is mesocrites aratus.

He looks like a cross between a field mouse, a guinea pig and a monkey.

With two pairs a breeder within a year may raise 100,000 and with the animals selling at $9 to $15 a dozen this can be a lucrative business.

The sloe-eyed light golden brown rodent's four feet look like miniature human hands. On them he can scoot backward almost as fast as forward as he darts around his little cage.

The hamster first was found in the early 1930s by an explorer excavating near Aleppo, Syria. He shipped a mother and eight hamsters to London, where scientists immediately became interested.

Speed Laboratory Work

Because the warm blooded animal reacts to serums in 10 to 14 days—a much shorter period than is necessary for rats and guinea pigs—laboratory work can be speeded. The hamster is subject to all the human ills that affect rats and guinea pigs and is highly favored by scientists.

The first hamsters shipped to the United States were sent to the U.S. Marine hospital in Carville, La., the nation's only institution for the treatment of leprosy. Today they are to be found in virtually every important medical laboratory and medical school.

Because the hamster thrives in temperatures between 65 and 75 degrees the Gulf states have been found an excellent habitat. One large hamstery is at Mobile, Ala., and there are two here. All find a ready market for the animals in pharmaceutical laboratories.

Hamsters make captivating pets, too. With their beady black eyes, their soft fur and their baby-like hands they seem to appreciate affection and become quite tame when handled. They are free of odor, have neither lice nor fleas and are subject to no ills of their own.

Hides His Food

The hamster stands about five inches high on his hind hands and likes to stand and brush at his nose with both front hands prior to eating. He is fond of hiding and usually builds a small den of straw or hay in a corner of a cage. There he stores part of his food and hides his young at the approach of danger.

Hamsters eat sparingly of dog food, poultry pellets and green vegetables and frequently store little bits of food in the pouch behind each rat-like ear. On occasion when moving her young, a mother hamster will store one of her inchling babies in the pouch.

There is little work in raising the animals and many breeders in this area do it as a hobby. Little room is required, as the average cage is but 12 by 18 by 8 inches.

Doodlings on Cliffs Puzzle Archaeologists

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—Archaeological sleuths are facing a perplexing "whodunit."

The mystery concerns numerous doodlings found on the steep cliffs and rock-strewn floor of near-by Keyhole canyon in the heart of the Mojave desert.

Two diversified schools have their own solution, but both agree these latest finds of the primitive art of leaving a mark, date back at least 1,000 years.

The doodles, or petroglyphs—as the more technical folk call them—have intrigued archaeologists and students of Indian lore ever since their discovery.

One school headed by Dr. George Baldwin, archaeologist with the national park service, says it was the work of the Patayans who disappeared from Nevada culture around 1200 A.D.

On the other hand, Dr. Robert Fenton of Boulder City, Nev., contends the petroglyphs are the work of the "little men." The "little men," Dr. Fenton asserts, were perfectly formed midgets about two feet tall, who were the leading citizens of the area in the first centuries of the Christian era.

Flooded Basement Fails To Interrupt 'Bookie'

CHICAGO.—Police raided a flooded basement here and arrested a handbook operator taking bets while seated on a raft.

Police Capt. Thomas Alcock said that Arthur Olson, 33, was "paddling furiously" between three telephones, taking bets on the horses.

Alcock and two detectives raided the place after getting a tip that a handbook was operating in a tavern basement. With a crowbar they pried open a trapdoor in the tavern above and dropped into four feet of water.

Olsen, hustled to the police station, said the basement was flooded by last night's rains. He said he made the raft himself.

Azizia, Near Tripoli, Holds High Heat Mark

WASHINGTON.—You think you live where it's hot? You should live in Azizia!

That's a town in northwestern Libia, about 25 miles south of Tripoli, where the highest temperature ever recorded under standard conditions was taken September 13, 1922. On that day the thermometer soared to 136.4 degrees, the national geographic society reported.

If you prefer to confine your research on heat extremes to the United States, visit Death Valley in southeastern California. An official reading of 134 degrees has been taken there at the weather bureau station on the valley's edge. Even higher temperatures, ranging up to 150 degrees, may occur in the low-lying interior.

For those interested in seeing how low the temperature can droo the place is the northern Siberia village of Verkhoyansk. Thermometers there hit 90 below zero in February, 1892—a reading still recognized as the world's record.

These are the metrreological champions—the official temperature extremes—but there are plenty of other claimants to thermometer fame.

Along the coast of the Persian gulf in southern Iran for instance, unofficial temperatures of 150 to 180 degrees have been taken in the boiling sun.

Dreams for Sale By Old Chinaman At Two Cents Each

SINGAPORE.—Wong, the half-blind consumptive story teller, has a dream for sale.

For 20 years Wong has pierced the sad cold walls of illiteracy in Singapore's Chinatown with the drone of his metallic voice. He sets up his wooden boxes, his kerosene lamp and, for all who care to pay two cents, he is willing to give to his fellow Chinese the magic benefits of his ability to read.

To thousands of illiterate laborers in the overcrowded streets in this inland speck at the bottom tip of Asia, Wong is an oasis in a desert of sorrow.

The story of Wong's work is told with sympathy and understanding by Set Yin Fong, young Chinese feature writer for the Singapore Straits Times.

Sot sat and listened in a smelly back lane (at other times Wong holds court on a temple porch or a traffic island) as the story teller read the news of the day from Chinese language newspapers.

Sometimes as many as 100 gather around. Emergency regulations in this area of turmoil prohibit mass assemblies, but the police understand and tolerate Wong's sessions. Chinese story telling is as old as the colony itself.

Wong spices the news with comments of his own and generally simplifies world events for his backward audience. It is only through Wong's weakened eyes that some poor Chinese keep abreast not only of momentous events, but also of municipal regulations and government statutes.

In his story telling he talks with few gestures and transports his listeners from the drab, unhappy land of today to the world of Chinese fancy, of ancient wars and adventures, of heroes and fairies.

The poor coolie, sitting in the dim light of a wick lamp, is lifted by his soothing words to concert with the three brother heroes—Kuan-Yu, the fierce god of war, Liu-Pei, the noble-minded emperor, and Chang-Fei, the gallant impulsive warrior.

He may dream of crossing swords with Tsao-Tsao, that tyrant of tyrants, or making love to that seductive lady, Sable Cicada, whose beauty was the downfall of heroes. He finds himself within the pre-ture ever recorded under standard conditions was taken September 13, 1922. On that day the thermometer soared to 136.4 degrees, the national geographic society reported.

Faulty Memories Catch Two Million Americans

KANSAS CITY, M.—Faulty memories caught up with almost two million Americans last year, and the Hallmark greeting card company here has proof. It rescued them with that many "belated" birthday greeting cards.

The firm published belated greetings for forgetful wives, husbands, sons, daughters, and friends—for a total of 20 different occasions.

And if sales continue to mount the number of cards devised for over looked occasions may be increased

Are there cards for husbands who let their wedding anniversaries slip by unnoticed? But yes!

Felon Outwits Police; Leaves Jail With Loot

ATLANTIC CITY.—Police were somewhat red-faced when they discovered that a prisoner not only had sneaked out of jail, but took with him $141 belonging to a cellmate.

Acting Detective Capt. James Pike said it all happened this way:

Twenty-eight-year-old Major Lofston was jailed for brandishing a loaded revolver at another man.

Because the resort jail is crowded, Lofston was placed in a cell with another man, who was getting over some boisterous celebrating.

Lofston managed to sneak from his cellmate's pocket a police receipt for valuables—$146 in cash — checked at the desk when he was admitted.

Armed with the receipt, Lofston waited for police to change shifts. He hollered for the new turnkey, announced that he was now sober and wanted out.

With his receipt as evidence, Lofston passed himself off as his cellmate, collected $141, minus $5 for bail, and walked out a free man.

It wasn't until the morning checkup of prisoners that Lofston's absence was discovered.

Police immediately got busy. They found Lofston at his home, and $113 in an empty can.

Back to jail went Lofston with two new charges against him—"jailbreak by ruse" and "larceny by trick."

Milk Among U.S. Top Five In Popular Drink Tests

NEW YORK.—People who think the average U.S. citizen is a hard-drinking man-about-town have another think coming, on the basis of figures that show just what he drinks each year.

Milk, beer, soft drinks, coffee and canned fruit and vegetable juices are the nation's five most popular beverages, according to an American Can Company analysis of government and industry figures.

On a per capita basis, the average inhabitant of this country last year consumed some 160.5 quarts of milk, 71.2 quarts of beer, 69.3 quarts of soft and carbonated drinks, 38.7 quarts of coffee and 8.3 quarts of canned fruit and vegetable juices, as compared with 4.7 quarts of hard liquors. Cans are used in some form in the packing and distribution of all five of the favorites, the study showed.

An almost five-fold increase in per capita consumption of canned fruit and vegetable juices during the past 10 years was noted in the analysis. New methods and processes for canning fresh-flavored orange, tomato and grapefruit juices were given credit for a major part of the increases.

No figures were available on consumption of the world's number one drink—plain water.

Yo-yo Staging Comeback In Several Universities

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—A University of Michigan philosophy professor had to stop a class because of a disturbance in the last row.

Upon investigation he found the student trying a difficult "loop-the-loop" with a yo-yo, the latest college fad.

Once apparently buried with raccoon coats, goldfish - swallowing, crew haircuts, and midget golf, stores at Ann Arbor report a huge sale of the spinning disks to Michigan students.

Air-Conditioned Bed Intrigues Purchasers

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—An air-conditioned bed got more than a second look from buyers at the semiannual Grand Rapids furniture market.

The bed had a foam rubber mattress with holes punched in it for cooled air to come up around the occupant.

The air-conditioning unit was installed in a 36x76-inch bed frame built to the floor. It had air filters, fans and a container for water or dry ice, and was controlled by a thermostat.

The bed, a product of Walter B. Stiles, had a heating element for cold weather. With the thermometer hovering around 98 degrees in the building, buyers paid little attention to that phase of the bed.
